She climbed up the tree and saw the ermine licking its lips and paws.

She didn't move anymore, and with her eyes closed she looked just like the dead bird.

The ermine was so sweet and playful that Lily forgot about the dead bird.

'I still need a few centimetres,' she thought, but in that moment she slipped and fell down in the snow.

Now she began to like the little animal.

Lily tried to catch her, but the ermine was too fast - she just jumped on another tree.

Lily wanted to follow her. She reached for the other tree, but her arms were too short.
